

LETTERS TO TOMORROW

Write a letter to a loved one in the future to call for political action on climate change now.

Because the future of our planet isn't written yet.

The climate crisis is affecting our lives already, and it's only going to get worse for the next generation unless we take action now to get it under control – because the years will tick away before we know it.

That's why everyone is writing Letters to Tomorrow, as part of the Great Big Green Week.

Letters to Tomorrow explain your hopes for future generations if our leaders step up to protect the environment – and your fears about what life could be like if we don't slow down climate change.

Your letter could be to your friend, child or even your future self.
